Registered at the G.P.O. as a Newspaper

FRIDAY, AUGUST 28, 1953

Freethinker

Vol. LXXIII-No. 35

Founded 1881

Editor: F. A. RIDLEY

Price Fourpence

WHEN the Jesuit Order was dissolved by Pope Clement the 13th in 1773, and declared to be "abolished, abrogated, and extinguita, and declared to be "abolished, abrogated, and and extinguished for ever," a decree demanded and promptly put into effect by all the Catholic States in Europe Frederici (frederic) of Prussia, Europe, Frederick "The Great," then King of Prussia, made this historic pronouncement :-

My 'most Christian ' brother, the King of France, has most Catholic ' brother, the King of Spain, has expelled the Jesuits; my 'most Faithbrother, the King of Portugal, has expelled the Mains; only His Atheistical Majesty, the King of Prussia, Continues to defend them." Actually, the position was even Worse than was stated by the former friend of Voltaire; for there was another some friend of Voltaire; for there was another when porter friend of Voltaire; for there protected the weather y monarch, who befriended and protected the famous Empress Wawed Jesuits; none other than the famous Empress therine the Second of Russia, who was not only a myined the Second of Russia, who was not only a atheist and, like Frederick, the friend and atheist and, like Frederick, the friend and tespondent of the French "Philosophes" (Freethinkers), but was but wax in addition, "The Messalina of the North," a Such a maniac whose sexual morals defied description. To such maniac whose sexual morals defied description. Jesus a sorry pass had the once mighty "Company of However teduced for protectors!

 $H_{0,Wever}^{0,0}$, better times were in store for the Holy Fathers. he F_{root} , better times were in store for the Holy Fathers. the French Revolution, republican and anti-clerical, broke and and and extended its ravages over Europe, and the Pope the expert assistance of the Jesuits to combat the danger. In August, 1814, after the (First) Abdication became the second secon became, as they still remain, the "brains-trust" of the Roman Catholic Church and the militant vanguard of the thetion in every land and sphere.

What," asked the great French anti-clerical historian, Mes Michelet, " are the Jesuits? Ask the man-in-the-street, fire fire ^{a Michelet,} " are the Jesuits? Ask the man in the Counter-trolution! ", " and he will reply: 'The Counter-line the Jesuit Order fully the present, the 20th century, the Jesuit Order fully the present, the 20th century, the result of the genius of up to its 19th century designation as the genius of the providence of the provi ¹^{unter-revolution.} It backs French conservatism in its Volting to abolish the Secular State foreshadowed by Volting to abolish the Secular State foreshadowed by Voltaire, and actually introduced by the Great Revolution; Aust, and actually introduced by the Great Revolution; Austria, it was behind Dollfuss, and is behind Franco Austria, it was behind Dollfuss, and is behind victory by an spain. Perhaps, however, its most brilliant victory the 20 pain. Perhaps, however, its most brilliant victory h the 20th century world, has been achieved in Portugal, that "Oth century world, has been achieved in Portugal, "Tederick of Prussia referred in the 18th century. For "Tugal to Prussia referred in the 18th century. For brugal, to-day, is a clerical paradise, under the dictatorhip of Prime Minister Dr. Salazar, a pupil of the Jesuits himself a former professor at the clerically-controlled liversity of Coimbra. Under the astute rule of Dr. Salazar who is a past-master of the political intrigues in particular, the Order which his Church and, in particular, the Order which his Church and, in particular, the Order which his church and itionally excelled. Portugal has his Church and, in particular, the Order that regained him, have traditionally excelled. Portugal has hurch ", her status as the "most Faithful" son of "Holy and has, indeed, been, so to speak, officially

"invisible imports" which add both to the profit and to the prestige of the present Salazar regime in Portugal, is none other than the Blessed Virgin, "The Mother of God" herself, who, as all the world knows-or does it?--appeared in person, in true Biblical fashion, to three young Portuguese shepherds who were watching their flocks near the hamlet of Fatima in The recognised by Heaven in that capacity. For amongst the Year of Grace, 1917.

However, the original miracle was before the days of the present Salazar regime, though, no doubt, the Fatima cult is one of the most valuable assets of Dr. Salazar's regime, indeed, without the prestige of Fatima to boost its spiritual and political wares, we doubt if the Catholic Church would have been able to have effectively regained its mediæval authority over Portugal. For Portugal has not always been the "most Faithful" Son of the Church. In the 18th century, as we have seen, both the Iberian nations, Spain and Portugal, expelled the Jesuits from their then dominions in both Europe and Latin America.

Actually, it was this Decree which put an end to the famous Jesuit "Republic" in Paraguay, that clerical Utopia of modern Catholic sociology. However, then, the Pope himself had shown them the way!

In more modern times, Portugal felt the insidious effects of anti-clericalism, first introduced into the Iberian Peninsula by the French soldiers of Napoleon during the Peninsular War (1807-1813). In 1910, an anti-clerical and Liberal revolution overthrew the Royal House of Braganza, the tool of the clerical regime, and installed a "Masonic' Republic which broke the political power of the Church, introduced secular education on the French model, and confiscated much of the vast property which the Church, as in Eire, had accumulated since the Middle Ages. For a few years, Portugal appeared to have definitely quitted the Middle Ages.

However, as in a good many other lands in modern times, the pace of progress in a still mediæval Portugal was too fast for its primitive social and cultural milieu. The country, perhaps the poorest in Europe, was still predominantly agrarian, with a still priest-ridden peasantry sunk in ignorance and superstition; both the essentially progressive and modern classes, the "middle" class and the industrial proletariat were conspicuous by their absence throughout the bulk of the country. Outside Lisbon and Oporto modern education was virtually unknown. Under such primitive conditions, a modern democratic and secular regime can hardly endure for long: for modern democracy is a very advanced social regime, and secular education presupposes an already existing cultural level which does not arise spontaneously out of still mediæval conditions of life, such as are still those of contemporary Portugal. In Portugal, the clerical counter-revolution had everything in its favour.

s then Yours. 13.5. peared nts le nistice ristian from cent arage a ano Com y fier troops

Iready

propu

ken now

chi

n Fur

'S OWN

s cred secret secret secret secret secret secret

. Long

ahen

ciel.

a ani

mani-ev ard and slam hul

- hu

-10

m

15.5

ignit.

,11

15

1 kh. 4

11 iv.

195

norati orking

In 1917, the Holy Virgin Herself effectively inaugurated the Portuguese Counter-Revolution by her six successive appearances at the remote, now, thanks to Her, worldfamous hamlet of Fatima, when the sun itself indicated its violent disapproval of the anti-clerical "masonic" Republic of Portugal by setting at naught the science upon which that regime was based, and by defying the "Law" of gravitation in a wild scamper round the sky. The effect of this "combined operation" upon Portuguese politics was soon self-evident; a combination of the reactionary classes in Portuguese society, of the Army, the feudal landlords, and, last but not least, the Church, overthrew the weak Liberal republic. They did not then, it is true, restore the "most Faithful" Kings of Portugal-perhaps out of deference to British sentiment, since Portugal is traditionally "Britain's oldest ally "since the 14th century, as part of the British doctrine of "The Balance of Power" against her then Atlantic rivals, Spain and France. However, for the past quarter of a century a clerical militarist-fascist regime, a "corporate State," has existed in Portugal, under the nominal Presidency of a succession of military figureheads, but under the effective and efficient dictatorship of Dr. Antonio Salazar, the Jesuit-trained nominee of the Church, first as Finance Minister and, for the past twenty years, as Prime Minister and de facto Dictator. [The present "Corporate" constitution dates from 1933.]

The present Salazar regime in Portugal is somewhat similar to the regimes of Dollfuss in Austria, Franco in contemporary Spain, and Peron in the present-day Argentine. It appears, however, to be more completely under clerical influence than any of its contemporary "Corporate" regimes. Indeed, to-day, Catholic sociologists all over the world point to the "Christian" State of Salazar's Portugal as the model of Catholic sociology in practice: even more so than De Valera's Eire, since Protestant heresy does not, according to the statements of Protestant missionaries, have at all an easy time in Salazar's Portugal. Naturally it goes without saying, that every trace of the formerly dominant "heresies" of Liberalism, Freemasonry and Freethought, have completely vanished, whilst their surviving exponents are cooling their heels in African concentration camps. Education is now entirely a clerical monopoly: the result of this priestly education is to be seen in children who see the Virgin Mary; in amateur-very amateur!-astronomers who see the sun careering round the Heavens; and in an entire nation which accepts the (literally!) childish swindle of Fatima, and which has turned the scene of a childish prank-or hallucination?-into a

A Philosophy of Poetry-2

(Concluded from page 258)

THE poet is ill fitted to construct an ethical system, a philosophy, an ideology or a Weltschauung. The poet, as such, knows no biology, no psychology, no economics or science of any sort. If we are to take our beliefs from the poet, to whom shall we listen? To Omar's happy resignation? Or to Browning's "God's in His Heaven"? Arnold knew some biology and wrote Rugby Chapel; Browning knew none and wrote Bishop Bloughram's Apology.

Right and wrong, truth and error, good and badthese are realms for others to explore. The world of the poet is make-believe.

All poetry is dope; if it is bad poetry it is poison. And let me make it perfectly clear that I exclude verse-making from all I have said. The versifier, as distinct from the poet, may tread any ground he likes. Verse-making has its place (A. P. Herbert, etc.) and has no doubt been national cult, and which erects a splendid temple to its Virgin Goddess in the midst of Oriental conditions of starvation and of the poorest peasantry in Europe to be sure, however, starvation is a potent stimulus to supernatural visions, as the example of many medieval saints exists to prove. Needless to add, the actual promoters of the visions, the clerical hierarchy and their political facility counterparts do not live in the bug-ridden handes of Fatima, but in the palaces and luxury hotels of Lisbon and fashionable Estoril, where they see the Virgin by proxy?

From the angle of politics, though a member of the "Atlantic Community" for "the defence of Democracy against Dictatorship" the of "the defence of Democracy against Dictatorship," the Salazar regime is no more a fitting representative of Dictatorship fitting representative of Democracy than is its Spannal counterpart, the still excluded Spain of Franco while political parties, except that of Salazar, are illegal and while a Presidential election a Presidential election was permitted a few years ago, all was soon made impossible by police interference. and all who had declared thereast who had declared themselves in favour of the antigovernment candidate were promptly arrested and sent to concentration camps! Incidentally, the political police this peculiar "Damoers and this peculiar "Democracy" were trained by Nazi specialists from the Gestance and a specialists from the Gestapo; one of whom, we believe, later and became commander of the world-infamous Dachau, and was duly hanged for the world-infamous Dachau, and was duly hanged for "war crimes"—a fitting successor in the late and unlamanted that the successor in the late and unlamented Holy Inquisition which formerly flourished as vigorounder flourished as vigorously under the "most Faithful", King of Portugal, as under their Royal brothers, the Catholic "Kings of Spatial Catholic "Kings of Spain.

Present-day Portugal, the Portugal of Salazar and of suits, is a clerical preseding Jesuits, is a clerical paradise, an anachronism in presented Western world. Along with Franco Spain, it represents semi-mediæval regime which dates from the Ages Faith " and of the " ancien Regime " before the Frence Revolution In such tractiti Revolution. In such traditional peasant communities Catholic Church is on its own chosen ground, and it is on its own chosen ground, and it is the second secon in such places that one sees the Blessed Virgin nowaday If she were to appear at and to, say, a Freethought comp in an advanced centre of civilisation, instead of at Louise and Fatima, where immemorial and Fatima, where immemorial ages of blind supervisit have, one may say, made her appearances inevitable in the indeed, could pass muster as an authentic miracle! In current Portugal of Fatima and the Jesuits, it indicates how deeply blind and the Jesuits, it indicates how deeply blind credulous "Faith " is implant in the human mentality and the least " is implant in the human mentality, and how long the Dark Ares survive in oases of superstition even in an age of and in the 20th century. and in the 20th century.

By G. H. TAYLOR

successful and worthwhile in several directions: it do not come anywhere within the scope of my criticism

- reach a theory of poetry along the following route:
 The phenomena of the external world are may objects by being perceived by men
- (2) They are analysed, indexed and catalogued by a scientist.
- (3) They are orientated by the philosopher.
- (4) They are decorated by the poet.

Let the poet make beautiful representations. caricatures; yes, even myths, out of his experiences jective as well as objective). No one shall demand tude. No one shall demand that all poets concur. shall apply any utilitarian test whatever. Let every run his finger along the pattern that appeals to him which his imagination re-creates.

By "decorating" the object I do not mean making pretty or more tolerable or more satisfactory on ether standards. I mean making it more of what it already is. A dewdrop may become a "starry diadem," the word "an arrow shot from the earth's bow at larksong and falling in a stillborn country the earth's bow at larksong and falling it should a sullborn sunrise "; but if an object is appalling it should catch made so in the poem; if macabre, the poet should catch that quality. Poetry, that is, should be appropriately decorative, not unrelatedly decorative. "Dirty British coaster with a salt-caked smoke-stack" is valid poetry in that it catcher the fill is a salt-caked smoke-stack. that it catches the filthiness of the object.

The beauty of the poem should, in fact, surpass that of the object. It should give us new eyes, new ears, new noses, for the object. for the object: new feelings towards, new reactions to, the eperience. One can never see the dew with the same Ales again, after reading Keats' lines on it. Our experience all frosty nights is enriched when we have read his stanza reginning

"St. Agnes' Eve! Ah, bitter chill it was,

The owl, for all his feathers was a-cold.

The hare limped trembling thro' the frozen grass And silent was the flock in woolly fold."

The meteorologist and physicist will tell us all we want to know about a sunset. The poet, as such, knows nothing about it; he paints what he feels: ---

"Parting day

 D_{ies} like the dolphin, whom each pang imbues

With a new colour as it gasps away.

The last still loveliest till 'tis gone, and all is grey."

(Byron)

The poet therefore decorates the experience; he does pay dull homage to it. He owes homage only to buy, which is "its own excuse for being." There are thousands of donkeys in existence but none so droll as de la Mare's Nicholas Nye. No real tiger can quite compare with Blake's

"Tiger, tiger, burning bright

In the forests of the night.'

 N_0 in the forests of the light of Tam o' Shanter. The song of the nightingale pleases the car for a time, but immortalised in the Ode to a Nightingale it is "a joy for

The original experience from which the poem has ^{prune} may, in point of fact, be particularly revolting. It description and the second sec description of such in Hiawatha does not make us loathe bed Indians and pity the deer: it makes us admire the ^{uescription} in relation to the situation it posits, because is an appropriate and aesthetically satisfying representation of it.

The poet therefore wrings out of a natural experience all he latent beauty of the event, hidden to all but the poet. Helent beauty of the event, indicate to an ashion of the velocity to the original experience, in the fashion of the velocity to the original experience and is fatal. clentist, reduces the element of make-believe and is fatal. the object, in this case, tends to remain tied to category above, the category of phenomena being merely sensed objects. The poet's highest task is to make myths out objects. Science has debunked the fanciful myths of hank ind, eating into them with facts and figures. Long the the poet, then, who can restore them in the land of make poet, then, who can restore the matter-of-fact make-believe, who can carve out of the matter-of-fact a biased construction, an image, a latent myth. Let in play Phoenix to the ashes of reality.

Let him consider the facts coldly: let him wince at the hight let him suffer as all poets have suffered. Then let the take the facts by the scruff of the neck and wring his design. If the poet could $d_{0,ign}$ out of them, infused with beauty. If the poet could d_0 this this to the world,

"Would he not shatter it to bits and then Re-mould it nearer to the heart's desire?"

The poet shall collect up all the fairies and demons discarded by science and redundant in philosophy, and house them in his land of make-believe. He shall not be restricted by the criteria of Right and Truth. He may see a pixie in the foliage, but if someone laughs his sprite will turn into a ball of thistledown, and a fairy dies each time his pen turns to propaganda. Wordsworth dipped into morals and politics and emerged pulpiteer. Browning dipped into theology and produced arguments in rhyme which are the mere vomit of poetry and, as arguments, obsolete before he penned them. Neither Bible, nor code, nor yardstick, shall the poet bring to his objects: he shall bring a light. It is for him to adorn and embellish, not to sermonise. An ode out of a Grecian urn is better than a "sermon out of a stone," and such a sermon is usually as barren as its object. It is not for the poet to put platitudes into rhyme.

The poet has his justification only when his treatment is superior to what could have been done in prose. Otherwise it was not worth doing; it was not worth the restriction to rhyme and metre. Nothing has been gained by the special discipline. Such discipline must have a purpose, and the purpose is to make words and phrases carry a richer content, to make them convey more by reason of their special setting, to achieve an intangible gain by cadence, diction, vowel changes, rhythmic punctuation: in brief, by word music. Otherwise, if the poem resolves itself into prose then the poet is an impostor. (This, of course, need not prevent him from becoming Poet Laureate). Finally, the poet's theme is distinct from his subject matter: the latter, as we have seen, may be trivial or revolting: by his theme I mean what the poet carves out of it.

The proper function of poetry is to create myths.

Theatre

"Anastasia" at the St. James's Theatre is a play by Marcelle Maurette and which has been adapted by Guy Bolton. It revives memories of the ill-fated Romanolis who were shot at Ekaterinburg in 1917. There have been persistent rumours that the Grand Duchess Anastasia -then sixteen---had survived and escaped from Russia, and these started a chain of stories and conjectures as to what happened to her. Impostors and masqueraders have tried their best to deceive, but have failed, yet what if one of them were Anastasia. And what if Anastasia decided that she did not wish to be a ghost of the past but would prefer to remain Anna Broun and find her own life.

Inevitably Anastasia has become the focal point of authors, as in this play which expresses the author's idea of what might have happened. Therefore, it is fantasy and best judged divorced from history. Technically its weakness lies in the author depending on the audience knowing some of the facts, and thus emotionally her success is almost assured. Mary Kerridge, in the part of the girl, does not disappoint us. She gives a strong and dignified performance conveying sentimental restraint, and her scene with the Dowager Empress-which is to establish whether she is genuine-is a moving one. Helen Haye gives a mature performance as the Dowager Empress, bringing to the part a refinement of bearing that could not easily be found in another actress.

These ghosts of the past-the few who survived dwell in an atmosphere to which they can never return. The author's message is not far removed from that contained in The Cherry Orchard, and Chekhov could write a better play.

953 Dis 5 de o be Iperainti rsd seist 5 01 303 y? · the TaC: 12 2 mist All a il antint w æ in ilists 00. and 71 10 Jerly ing DIVE

(UN

30

0 de

11

1. Sat B

This Believing World

Apart from the ordinary chaos resulting from the strikes in France, what ought to have happened to the all-believing pilgrims on their way to Lourdes? Most of them were just as badly stranded as an infidel excursionist—though many of these pilgrims belong to the halt, the maimed, and the blind. How is it that the Virgin herself never organised proper conveyances for the sick people? Here was a heavenly chance to show Lourdes as a "holy" shrine managed from Heaven, and to prove that all scoffers like Zola were completely wrong—and yet the chance was not taken. It makes one think, as "doubting" Thomas said to Jesus—or was it the other way about?

Once again we are reminded of that fine Christian teaching, "He doeth all things well," when we read the harrowing descriptions of the havoc wrought by earthquakes in the Greek islands. The survivors appear to be even too stunned to pray. Still, this is quite unfair to God Almighty who, after all, did send supplies and help through the various navies in the vicinity. Without the Lord's help, nothing would have been sent, of course. And in any case, we must never blame God for earthquakes. Everybody knows that earthquakes are sent merely as a punishment for the wicked. No sin, no earthquakes. It's as simple as that.

A very religious organisation called the Gideons, whose object is "to win men and women for Jesus Christ," has so far placed more than 3,000,000 Bibles into hotels in America outside New York, and in three years has given a special edition of 4,000,000 to school children. Our own hope is that people in hotels and school children will read the Holy Book for there is nothing like an acquaintance with God's Word so powerful for making infidels. Most Christians and Bible believers simply don't know the Bible and very rarely read it. This can easily be tested—ask a thorough believer to give you the special message Haggai, Nahum, or Obadiah has for a thirsting world?

We ourselves often get Bible believers writing to us with sorrow and pity at our infidel unbelief, and claiming they can answer any Bible question posed by ignorant Atheists. Out of the 89,563 questions we could put them, we selected about twenty comparatively easy ones, and asked an enthusiastic whole-hearted believer to give us his answers. Alas, all he could say was, "I don't know!" and adding, "I don't care neither." Of course not. The man who really knows his Bible as well as its history—as far as that can be traced—becomes almost automatically an Atheist.

There must be hundreds of well read priests and clergymen whose belief is no more than ours just because they do know the Bible. What about Liberal Christians? That parsons cannot leave the Church is a tragedy for them but what could they do even in our own Welfare State? Starve?

We were pleased to see that the American politician, E. H. Rees, who was trying to introduce an "Anti-Blasphemy Bill" into Congress, has been obliged to withdraw it. He found it, we are told, "impossible to define the word 'blasphemy'" to express his own "intent." He really aimed the Bill at Atheists and was "shocked" to learn that even religious leaders were against him. As a good Christian himself, Mr. Rees found it hard to believe that there actually were some Christians who disliked bigotry and intolerance. The only reason we can think of for these Christians is that, either they do not believe and cannot say so, or that for once they put their humanity before their religion.

The Canvasser

By LESLIE HANGER THE other day God received a call from St. Peter at the gate, informing him that a man was without demanding to see him on urgent business.

"His name," said St. Peter looking at the card in hand, "is Mr. J. B. Hatts of England."

"Probably come to offer me a seat in Westminster Abbey for the Coronation," surmised the Almight "These English think they own me—however. sho him up."

It transpired that Mr. J. B. Hatts had nothing whatever to do with the Coronation. "I have come," he said interest you in the International Humanist and Ethical Union."

"I beg your pardon," queried God, "I did not que catch..."

Mr. Hatts repeated himself clearly and distinctly, Gou some new religious sect, Christian I presume?, Gou sighed. Almost every day some such sect was formed and they all came to him, full of their own importance, demanding his patronage.

"No, not Christian," continued Mr. Hatts, " and I would be the the venture to say more deserving of your attention for the very reason."

very reason." "Indeed," murmured God politely, but bored. "In era of strife and crisis in which the world flounder, has produced on the one hand a Christian who admin your continued existence is repugnant to reason considers you are still necessary for human weifare. the other hand a number of humanists have lost the easy the other hand a number of humanists have lost the easy optimism of a quick materialist victory. I feel the co-operation between these points of view would extremely fruitful, and were you to apply for membership of the International Humanist and Ethical Union. Such co-operation might be achieved."

In an irritable tone God replied, "My dear god s are you asking me to run with the hare and hunt hounds? I assure you that if I join any associate is as perpetual President with full powers of Kierkegaard may think me absurd and Brunner a but if you want to know what the great mass of the per think of me, go to church on Sundays and listen to parson in the pulpit and watch the congregation lap up his words. That is what counts. An age of strife Men lose their self-confidence and turn to me in feat

"I own that many men still cling to you," said Mr. the "that is the more reason why you should move with times. If progress—."

God cut him short with a wave of the hand. Progress means nothing to me. With me the more things chart the more they are the same. Now if you have a to found a new religion, as so many have, 1 have objection to becoming its President. Subject to my conditions, of course. Beyond that I really cannot you." With that God summoned an attendant angel and bade him show Mr. J. B. Hatts the way out.

ESSAYS IN FREETHINKING. By Chapman Cohenand second series. Price 3s. each: postage 3d. PETER ANNET, 1693—1769. By Ella Twynam. Price postage 1¹/₂d.

THEISM OR ATHEISM. The Great Alternative Chapman Cohen. Price 4s. 3d.; postage 3d. THE FREETHINKER

THE FREETHINKER

41, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.1. Telephone: Holborn 2601.

The FREETHINKER FUND.—Previously acknowledged, £86 35. 6d. A Hancock, 2s. 1. Yettram (Dublin), 6s.; W. MacKee, 7s. 2d. Total: £86 188 - 8.1 Intal: £86 18s. 8d.

To Correspondents

Office at the following rates (Home and Abroad): One year, 14 45. (in U.S.A., $3:50); half-year, 125.; three months, 65.

Correspondents are requested to write on one side of the paper only and the are requested to write on one side. only and to make their letters as brief as possible.

thre Notices should reach the Secretary of the N.S.S. at this office hy Details Office by Friday morning.

the Pioners Friday morning. The Pioners for literature should be sent to the Business Manager of the Pioners Friday W.C.I, and the Pioneer Press, 41, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.I, and hol to the Editor not to the Editor.

Lecture Notices, Etc.

OUTDOOR OUTDOOR Branch N.S.S. (Broadway Car Park).—Every Sunday, Dop.m.: H. D.S.S. (Broadway Car Park).—Every Sunday, ³⁰ p.m.; H. DAY and A. H. WHARRAD.

Kingston Branch N.S.S. (Castle Street).—Sunday, August 30, P.m.: Messrs. BARKER and MILLS.

anchester Branch N.S.S. (Deansgate Bomb Site).—Every week-day 1 p Branch N.S.S. (Deansgate Bannes. Every Sunday, day, 1 p.m.: Messrs, Woodcock and Barnes. Every Sunday, ³ ^{p.m.}, at Platt Fields, a Lecture.

North London Branch (White Stone Pond, Hampstead Heath).— Sunday, August 30, noon: F. A. RIDLEY.

^{London} Branch N.S.S. (Marble Arch).—Every Sunday from pm. or Branch N.S.S. (Marble Arch).—Every Sunday from other hin, onwards: Messrs. O'NEILL, CLEAVER, WOOD, and other makers

Children S. Engagements.—Friday, August 28, 7-45 p.m., Children (Moor Lane); Saturday, August 29, 6 p.m., Enlield; August 30, 3 p.m., Blackburn Market; and at Enderby, the Boulevard, 8 p.m., Debate with the Rev. Mr.

INDOOR New Street).—Sunday, August 30, 7 p.m.: Mr. J. M. ALEXANDER, Freemasonry, Politics, and Christianity.

NOTES AND NEWS

Many happy returns to our former Editor! Cohen ut conveys its warmest greetings to Mr. Chapman Cohen who, on Tuesday, September 1, celebrates his 85th Whilst the infirmities natural to old age protection. Cohen nowadays from taking any active part in the work of the nowadays from taking any active part in the for the Freethought Movement, we can be sure that f_{ar} as his health permits he still follows with unabated the movement to which his entire life and rare the movement to which his child very devoted. As is, we assume, already known to our readers, Mr. Cohen was the second editor of The Freethinker and the Wird Press the second editor of The Freethinker and the Secular Society from 1915 bird President of the National Secular Society from 1915 W_{W} Foote in both capacities. Prior to succeeding to he editorship of this journal he had been a regular conhbutor since 1897 and Foote's right-hand man in his last as editor. Mr. Cohen spoke continuously on N.S.S. as editor. Mr. Cohen spoke continuously air speaker Views from 1890. He started as an open-air speaker Views, perhaps, more Victoria Park, East London, but was, perhaps, more famous as a debater than for any other form of the spoken

10 praise Chapman Cohen in the columns of The the the would, indeed, be "taking coals to Newcastle," the two would, indeed, be "taking coals to Newcastle, the two would, indeed, be "taking coals to Newcastle," the familiar proverb runs! An original philosophic hinker, an exponent of the secularist mental outlook of brilliont lecturer, and a deadly Unrivalled lucidity, a brilliant lecturer, and a deadly debater, the name of Chapman Cohen was world-famous in Freethought circles and is likely, if we may anticipate the judgment of history in respect of one who is still alive, to secure for him a permanent place amongst the great Freethinkers of modern times. In the literary field, apart from his innumerable articles in The Freethinker, he has given us a small library of booklets and pamphlets, all alike distinguished by wit, lucidity and, what was, perhaps, the pre-eminent literary characteristic of Mr. Cohen, his unrivalled ability to express in the simplest words the most profound problems that confront human thought. "Comparisons are," proverbially, "odious," but Mr. Cohen certainly ranks very high amongst the major exponents of modern Rationalism. Who, for example, is ever likely to forget his devastating logic with which he overwhelmed a whole series of famous Christian opponents on the public platform? It is an ironic commentary on the age in which we live that this great man ends his days without any publicity or official recognition such as is so freely bestowed upon ecclesiastical and other nonentities without a fraction of his ability.

Like his great predecessors, Bradlaugh and Foote, Mr. Cohen is a man of the people and owed nothing to academic education. As that eminent Rationalist the late John A. Hobson once remarked in the hearing of the present writer, it is notable how few men of original genius have owed anything to the formal academic routine of official education. Certainly this axiom applies to nearly all the great Freethinkers of modern times: Thomas Paine, Robert Owen, Charles Bradlaugh, John A. Robertson, Herbert Spencer, G. W. Foote, Bernard Shaw, Chapman Cohen, all these men of original genius escaped the influence of formal education, and were, probably, none the worse for that! Originality does not thrive on copybooks.

On behalf of both The Freethinker which he edited for so long and so ably, and on behalf of the National Secular Society, which he led for so long and so wisely, the Editor of The Freethinker conveys to his illustrious predecessor the warmest good wishes for his 85th birthday. It is an honour, of which we are deeply sensible, to succeed such an intellectual giant. May he long enjoy a green old age. And so say all of us!

Among the "best-sellers" of our Freethought Movement, ever since 1888, has been our Bible Handbook which, preceded by its masterly preface by G. W. Foote, has now gone through nine editions. A tenth edition is now on sale, with a Foreword by the present Editor of The Freethinker, at 4s. plus postage 3d.

The enterprising secretary of the Glasgow Branch of the N.S.S., Mr. J. Barrowman, has arranged a debate on Spiritualism for October 4 with one of the best known Spiritualists in the Movement, Mr. J. B. McIndoe. The Freethought case will be in the hands of Mr. H. Cutner whose visit to Glasgow for the debate will be his first. We hope this "advance" notice will enable Glasgow readers to turn up in force and, if possible, bring their Spiritualist and Christian friends. It is many years since Mr. Cutner met one of the "stalwarts" of Spiritualism, Mr. M. Barbanel, and he is delighted to meet another.

On September 12 and 13 the Executive Committee of The World Union of Freethinkers is meeting in Brussels to arrange details for the 1954 World Congress to be held in Luxemburg. Mr. F. A. Ridley will represent the N.S.S. and hopes to read a paper at the Luxemburg Congress.

t the 1ding n his inster ichty.

show

iter

thicil

quile

.02

Gin

Seing

OWE

rotall

· th.1

·Thi

i. hui thui

1.

. 0.

CD!

that d h

rship

such

d sit.

h the

on, il

1.eltr

milil

eople o thi

ppin e ani

5 00

Halls

li th'

757.5

usull help

1 ille

FIL

2.2.1.1

8

•• [i]

1953

Robert Taylor The Devil's Chaplain (1784-1844) By H. CUTNER

(Concluded from page 270)

THERE is an interesting note in which Taylor points out that he quotes from "the great and wonderfully curious work, entrusted to the revision of TALASIPHRON, called the Anacalypsis, by the late Godfrey Higgins, Esq. - printed, but not published." It may be added here that the Anacalypsis was published in two large volumes; but so damning was its indictment of the supernatural origin of Christianity that Higgins' pious son bought up and destroyed all the copies he could procure. The original edition is almost impossible to obtain, but a new one published some few years ago could be bought for £9 9s. One is obliged to pay heavily for such information as is contained in the Anacalypsis.

The knowledge and keen analysis of Bible stupiditiesunless seen through the medium of allegory which forms the basis of the Devil's Pulpit are just as evident, nay, more so, in the lectures delivered in 1833. It is a pity that they are not reprinted as a sequel to that work which in reality they are. Is Taylor not absolutely right here:-

This story of Adam and Eve . . . in the language of the great Frenchman, Dupuis, "La nature de la premiere aventure determine necessairement celle de la seconde. Point de peche point de reparation, point de coupable, point de reparateur!" Was there never a talking scrpent—then there never was any crucified saviour! Was the scene in the garden of Eden a mere fable- then the scene in the garden of Gethsemane must be a fable also. And this is a point which can never be too much insisted on. It should never be lost sight of. The story of Adam and Eve is not a branch, nor a limb, of Christianity, which might be cut off and leave the stock surviving, but it is the heart and the life itself: and where that is not, no part of Christianity remains.

But it is in the explanation of all sorts of out-of-way Biblical stories, myths, legends, allegories, and words, which proves how Taylor worked at his lectures, aiming to find in them the real origin of religion. And beside all this, constantly does he show by analogy and illustration his contempt for, and defiance of, Christianity. A lecture like "The Fish: An Astronomico-Theological Discourse" is worth, from almost every point of view, millions of sermons by even the most modern bishops.

The great truth is that THERE NEVER WAS BUT ONE RELIGION IN THE WORLD! And the great lie is, the pretence to make a distinction where there never was a difference. Paganism, Judaism, Deism, Christianism, and all other isms are but one and the self-same Ism, being each or any of them, as chance or different degrees of ingenuity have prevailed, either more or less eleverly constructed poems, or tissues of fiction, thrown over the face of universal nature, whose allegorical genius speaks in that inscription on the statue of that Saitie Isis: "I am all that is, that hath been, or that shall be, and no man hath lifted my veil. Alike in India, in Egypt, in Greece, in Italy, from the Ganges to the Nile, from the Nile to the Thames, the religious language and the religious ideas of "all people that on earth do dwell" have through the same eras of time, borne the same sort of references, used the same sort of ceremonies, and made play about the same eternal conceit of fish, fishermen, fish ponds . . the Chaldaic Oannes, the Indian Vishnu, the Egyptian Bacchus, the Uranian Venus, the Philistine Dagon, the Grecian Neptune, the Christian Jesus, are all of them icthyomorphic deities, mermaids, fish-fags, ladies of the lake, all of them gudgeons themselves or baits to catch gudgeons! And hence . . . there can be no going to Heaven but only in the way that a fish could go there by water no salvation but by baptism. .

Taylor's lecture, however, should be read in its entirety as it covers a vast ground and is full of wit-real wit that is, the kind which is so universely disliked by the pious, the kind that pokes fun at the religious absurdities which, believed in literally by Christians and their like can only be justified on grounds of faith, for reason-and humour, would implaceably reject them. No better explanation any case, can be given than that by Taylor in this lecture on Jesus the "fisher" of men, or a "fish" himself, of of the fact noted by the f the fact noted by the famous Dom Calmet that, and the primitive Christian the primitive Christians, the figure of a fish was adopted as a sign of Christianity.

It is a matter of great regret that the Philalethian show have so suddenly ceased without as far as the present in writer has investigated the problem—a reason, except the one already advanced. It is possible that he did finite his "Life and Opinions" and that the manuscript wa among his effects when he died at Tours.

Enough has, however, been said in these pages about e remarkable work which the remarkable work which was published, and merely stands almost alone in Freethought literature, not merely for its grasp of the essential problems connected with he documentary evidence for the origins of Christianity for the very valuable suggestions as to its allegorie white meanings from the solar-myth point of view. White is true that Taylor influenced or was read by many late writers-like Judge Strange he cannot be said to have left any real disciples after him. It required a very siderable grasp of multisiderable grasp of mythology in general, and the myth theory in particular, the mythology is a second to be a s myth theory in particular, to speak or write upon the confidence which Tautor the confidence which Tautor the confidence which the conf the confidence which Taylor shows in every line of writings. It is not an avery shows in every line of writings. It is not an easy subject to master, for the supposes a considerable knowledge of ancient and mod languages as well as comparative religions. Perhaps the more modern investigations into the origin of religions cover a wider field than that envisaged by Taylor date therefore some of his work much much and by Taylor date therefore some of his work might be dubbed out of date Robert Taylor stood almost all the fully

Robert Taylor stood almost a lonely figure in the rule. Freethought over one hundred of Freethought over one hundred years ago. It is to hoped that, as in the case of Thomas Paine, posterity yet honour him as a brave and unconquerable solding the fight for Freedow of the the fight for Freedom of Thought.

Korea

NOW the tighting has ceased in Korea it would set of the fair assumption that it will not be resumed, at least international scale of international scale. If any other prediction might ventured it is that any real peace settlement is remote Korean unity still more problematical.

And what has been achieved by this bloody structure from the Little apart from the killing or maining of 2,300,000 beings and a devastation that not even Germany From the United Nations standpoint it can hardly be be cribed as a military victory. True, they have shown ability, by force of arms if necessary, to resist approx by the Communists, an advance on the old Leag Nations, who in the Italo-Abyssinian contest were on to carry into effect even a policy of sanctions. other hand, the Asiatic may comfort himself that he shown his capacity to stand up to the Caucasian and Further, the effect on the development him. Chinese army has been remarkable. They started war with little in the way of armaments beyond weapons, such as machine guns, trench mortars and like, with a few borressed like, with a few borrowed tanks and planes. But in three years they have learned a small planes. three years they have learned a great deal and, in the we

Unholy Matrimony

By BISSET LOVELOCK

1953 only

141

31, 1

:clurc

01 01

11000 opted hould

-escal of the finish

11:2"

inde which ierely

h the

. but ricil

it 1055

have con.

solut with f h

, will er l

EF.

is" de

いい an the has h31 (h-

RARELY has any attempted legislation caused such commotion in ecclesiastical circles as the various proposals to amend the ecclesiastical circles as the various proposals been amend the Marriage Laws, and rarely has the Bible been banged and bandied about with quite such ferocity by the cions of the Church as during the parliamentary debates Altendant upon this question. In 1949, a Bill by Lord Mancroft intended to legalise marriage with a divorced slife's sister, was strangled in its infancy by episcopal insing much to the joy of the pious prelates and The pundits of protestantism.

The whole of the opposition's arguments were, as Viscount Simon pointed out at the time, curiously reminisint of those levelled against the deceased wife's sisters Bills a hundred years before; clerical arguments, it would change little with the passage of time.

For forty-odd years, since 1907 to be precise, Englishhave been privileged to marry their deceased wives' ters, should they be qualified to do so, without the offpring of the union being labelled illegitimate, and they software being ostracised from the society of the sodly is being ostracised from the society availed godly yet perhaps few of the people who have availed henselves of this altered state of affairs, and even fewer he haven't, remember the bitter struggle between church ind State that led up to it.

From first to last, the bulwarks of the opposition to Mer-in-law marriages Bills was the Bible, the arguments round controversial texts in Leviticus, notably opter 18, verse 18, which said: "Neither shalt thou take a site to her sister, to vex her, to uncover her nakedness. heide the other in her lifetime." Plain as this statement hay see the other in her lifetime. may seem to people of normal intelligence, the Christian ebrew nevertheless furnished learned Professors of Hebrew who were willing to argue that "in her lifetime" ⁴Pplied to the sister and not the wife, an interpretation that would to the sister and not the wife, an interpretation that Patriarcher the whole verse rather pointless, as even the Patriarcher the whole verse rather pointies, as each of a mine, were hardly likely to become possessed of a corpse. uning desire to uncover the nakedness of a corpse. Fait Churches' appeal to scholasticism inspired Earl of Dalhousie, who was then the leader of the hetormers, to write to the Professors of Greek and Hebrew the Universities in Europe, as well as numerous his of doubtful authority, asking for their interpretation of the disputed texts, the only sensible reply came The disputed texts, the only sensible topy, who role is required by the but common sense that is required The It is not Greek but common sense that is required the interpretation of the passage you mention." went on to opine that common sense was not one of qualities peculiar to theologians, and so the battle and in press and pulpit. In 1849 Mr. Gladstone assured e of Commons that if marriage with a deceased House of Commons that if marriage with a dorm of sister were permitted the "most horrible form of would ensue; in 1850, Richard Sheil waxed piously thims." would ensue; in 1850, Richard Shell wholesale eduction and painted lurid pictures of the wholesale eduction and painted lurid pictures of the wholesale the unit of saintly sisters-in-law, Richard Cobden was of ^{opinion} that Mr. Sheil's mind, like his argument, was but and calumnious."

By 1883, the Bill, at the instigation of the Duke of 1883, the Bill, at the instigation of the Duke of Lords for Marlborough, was thrown out of the House of Lords for billing the breath of Christian charity waftthe thirteenth time and the breath of Component inspired various through the House of Commons inspired various mbers to utter slanderous statements about the Chief who was of the opinion that sister-in-law marriages ^{proper} and even laudable the criticity of the price would smile upon such union, providing the price as right legalised this unhaloed proper and even laudable" the Church of Rome, is right, and all nations that legalised this unhaloed late

The bench of Bishops in the House of Lords despite the opposition of the Queen and the Royal Dukes, were still determined to cling to the jealously guarded privilege of bastardising other people's children, and the various organs of the established and dissenting Churches continued to pour forth abuse upon the heads of the reformers.

The opinions of the Christian Million were decidedly un-Christian as were the epithets applied by the Family Churchman to the Prince of Wales and the Royal Dukes, whilst the Church Review was of the opinion that only the gallant efforts of our Noble Bishops prevented the legalisation of incest, which Bishops, according to The Freethinker, were "as obstinate a set of avaricious hypocrites as the world has ever produced," than which no truer words had as then been spoken.

Despite the opposition of the Archbishop of Canterbury, sixteen Bishops, and the Catholic Duke of Norfolk, the deceased wife's sisters Bill at last reached the statute book sullied only by the concession that allowed the clergy to refuse to solemnise sister-in-law marriages.

The clergy, however, went one step further, refusing not only the marriage rites, but also communion and burial rites, generally making themselves a great comfort and happiness to their Bishops, until one Mr. Banister, an eminent churchman, who had married his deceased wife's sister, and been refused communion, sued, at the risk of his immortal soul, the offending clergyman, and won the day.

To-day, the various acts are consolidated in the Marriage Act of 1949, an act that leaves a lot to be desired. The fight to divest the Marriage Laws of their Mid-Victorian trappings still goes on, and now as in the past The Freethinker is in the fore.

KOREA from previous page

of The Observer's correspondent, "China must now be rated as a great military power"! The Western Powers necessarily cannot point to any such profit. Again quoting The Observer, R.O.K., "The South Korean armed forces cannot ensure the defence of their territory without the armed assistance of the United Nations. It is because he knows this that Syngman Rhee has adopted an attitude so inconvenient and so irritating to the Western Powers. He perceives that when the U.N. forces finally withdraw, they will be withdrawn a long way, whereas the Chinese, like the poor, will be always with him, just over the border. He senses that such a situation can only deteriorate, so far as his interests are concerned, and that if the country cannot now be forcibly united under his rule, it is likely sooner or later to be forcibly united under that of his political enemies.

The Korean struggle may appear to be of no direct interest to this journal, yet there are lessons in it for the freethinker. On neither side do the aims and ideals of rationalism have any place. The lack of policy on the part of the Western Powers is only too painfully evident; to restore the status quo, the oppression and corruption of the vernial Rhee administrators, the absentee landlord and moneylender is a mockery of the cause of Democracy. Yet, for 25,000 prisoners to resist all persuasion to return to their homeland and to be ready to face the dreary prospect of exile, is no advertisement for Communist rule. If, on the one hand, the United Nations would courageously put through a radical policy of agrarian and social reform, and on the other hand the Communists would accompany their reforms with freedom of thought and speech, there might be some possibility of peace and unity in Korea.

280

Ascension or Assumption?

1.-" Jesus ascended to Heaven from a room in Jerusalem." (Mark xvi, 19.)

II .- "Jesus ascended to Heaven from a mountain in Bethany, during the same evening as his resurrection.' (Luke, xxiv, 50.)

III.-" Jesus was seen walking around Jerusalem, forty days after his resurrection, talking with Disciples [Acts, I, 3] then again went up.'

Sunday School teachers should think on these things, as Notes of Lessons, especially as the brothers of Jesus said "he is beside himself," which in Hebrew means " thou fool,"

WM. AUGUSTUS VAUGHAN.

Correspondence

MONARCHY AND NATION?

SIR,--" Mr. Paul Varney" is, seemingly, terrified at Trade Unions pressing for two million pounds a day more than the "Nation" earns.

The above sum is ten pence per day, per capita, on a population of 50 million.

Remove the waste and the parasites, in an anarchic society of factions with weapons of death. Abolish the wars and the wage system, and let humans co-operate and then what is ten pence a day? If all this cannot be--then what?

He says more money than the "Nation" earns-" some of it, he means! A Freethinker should, at least, think scientifically, and not confuse what is by the individual, with global expressions like "Nation," "We" and "Our," when only one or some, is the correct premise.—Yours, etc.,

CHAS. E. BERRY.

P.S .- We hear 'talk of "our" investments, and "England" becomes 11 men at cricket or one multi-millionaire winning a yacht trophy-C.E.B.

BELLOC AND CHESTERTON

SIR,-Mr. Paul Varney has excelled himself in writing nonsense about these writers. They had a perfect right to propagate their Romanism-just as Foote and Bradlaugh had a right to propagate their Atheism. And it is a fact that the Socialists, Wells and Shaw, made ten times more money-mostly from the "bourgeoisie."—Yours, etc.,

LRR

WHO WON THE KOREAN WAR?

SIR, May I point out a rather misleading statement in your front page article, "Peace Breaks Out" (Friday, August 14). You state that China was able "to fight on equal terms, and to hold the industrially advanced West at bay, unconquered, for three years.

In the first place, the terms were never equal. The Communists had overwhelming superiority in manpower which was barely matched by our greater fire power and superior equipment. Furthermore, we had no safe sanctuary behind the lines for resting and reforming armies, building and operating airfields, etc., free from attack, as the enemy had in Manchuria. Secondly, China did not hold the "West" at bay at all, in any military carea.

R.O.K. military sense. Surely, the case was quite the reverse! and U.S. forces, aided by mere token forces from other Western powers, held the Chinese hordes at bay for over two years, and indeed could have utterly smashed China had they not been handicapped by high policy. The only sense in which China "held us at bay" was a political one. We allowed China and her supporters to drag the truce talks on for two years while our highly mechanised armies bogged down into a war of attrition, fought in trenches reminiscent of the 1914-18 war. Even then, General James Van Fleet complained that any action larger than a patrol by the forces under his command had to be previously approved by Washington. That the war dragged on for over three years was due to this sort of policy rather than to any military prowess of China.

Finally, sir, you say that your columns are open to suggestions for ensuring peace, so may I be permitted to put forward this simple one? A fully arrest the permitted to put forward state simple one? A fully armed alliance between the United State of America and the British Empire with military installations is strategic points all over the world. Who would dare to challenge such a power?—Yours R. D. MARRIOTT. such a power?-Yours, etc.,

R. D. MANNE R. D. MANNE The fact is that "The United Nations"—in effect, main America—in a three years war were unable to drive the Chi-out of Korea and ended in a statement. One wight also relevant out of Korea and ended in a stalemate. One might also relevant add that the Chinese number of the stalemate of the stale o add that the Chinese numerical superiority was only just balance by Western industrial and technical superiority was only just parameters by Western industrial and technical superiority. This would perhaps happened 50 years are superiority. have happened 50 years ago -EDITOR.]

SIR,—The inclusion in "Views and Opinions" (August issue) of comments on war was eminently suited to The Freethinker's cause.

Religion and war are ulterior and mundane correlatives of tural scheme of externion and mandane correlatives natural scheme of extortion which permeates the flux and interpret of all life. Each is a manifestation of the inherent transmission in human relations is termed set is here to be inherent transmission. the self-preservation instinct. One need not search widely the origin of the force: evolutionary laws have render prominent because of the increased chances of survival which gives its possessors. Such a complex and therefore well the gives its possessors. Such a complex, and, therefore, well mean organism as man must necessarily evince in no small degree is qualities of the instinct which has been no small bis present. qualities of the instinct which has carried him to his present status. Doubtless it is to this inevitable circumstance vis which pollute mankind are to be imputed.

The religious and the self-seeker are equally blameless vicinity of the cosmopolitan "Will" apprehended by Schopenhauer and placed on an organic basis by Darwin. The vast majority mankind are, of course, subject to both self-interest tendences. mankind are, of course, subject to both self-interest tendered but, in view of the dependence of faith in immortality who belief in the supernatural, and of the increasing difficult the alert mind has in adhering to such belief, the religious more is slowly succumbing to the religious more determined and the religious more is slowly succumbing to the more tangible prospects offered an attitude of social materialism and the prospects of the later an attitude of social materialism, and it is, therefore, this part which would appear to constitute the real and final danger with ideal world-state.

War as we know it is an advanced phase of human fricture having its evolution by way of the disputes between industry families, tribes, nations, and similar groups. There is an international analogy to this sequence in the species. analogy to this sequence in the species which develops genus, a family, an order is also a species which develops genus, a family, an order is also a species which develops a species which develop genus, a family, an order, a class, and, finally, a phylum, whereas biological evolution proceeds by means of annihilation the growth of social and political by means of annihilation the growth of social and political bodies is compassed by a process of assimilation. How how here the by a process of assimilation. Hope of a complete internet to civilisation is, therefore, not likely to prove vain. As of the identity of the active and passive we have a of the set of the identity of the active and passive moleties, knowledge of the can hardly discomfort posterity any more than a reading feel relative successes of the Jutes and the Angles brings such feeling

The acceptance of the foregoing cannot alone give composition alone give composition alone give composition along along a second along along a second along to the altruist, however. For the development of larger in fewer warring groups with the progress of history does not her the ennities of the smaller the ennities of the smaller groups : it merely overshadows and in our remote literin and in our remote Utopia we shall presumably be plaging of the same insidious instinct which here are a start we and in our remote Utopia we shall presumably be plast at the same insidious instinct which has militated against cur being since the birth of civilisation. And, furthermore, up one has faith in some "clan vital" which will bear man up with the mere lapse of time, the probability of the instince persistance must be faced. But a unified humanity is eugenist's dream: artificial selection will effectually dispose the unfortunate curse which nature has of necessity land of us.—Yours, etc.,

D. G. HOLLID.

Sir,--May I make a brief addition to the facts presented. Mr. Harry Warhurst's interesting letter.

What most struck me about the Coronation Ceremony what I deem the acme of strangeness, as depicted in the Gw "The Queen is Crowned", were the last words. I quote: Save the Queen! May she live for ever." For ever? So the young lady becomes 'a goddess, with the got life attribute of immortalized

I now await her canonisation, or has that already been effected attribute of immortality! by the Holy Oil?-Yours, etc.,

VALERIE Wante